A 31-year-old Polish woman has accused her Indian boyfriend of raping her on the pretext of marriage.

The woman had met the accused in 2014 on a cruise where they both worked in hospitality.

After their stint on the cruise ship ended, they kept in touch through social media and, a few days later, the man reportedly proposed.

In March 2015, the woman, along with her two friends, visited India for two weeks.

During the trip, she claims to have spent a huge amount of money on accommodation and travel on the accused.

'He told me that he was expecting to get some money from a friend and would pay me once he received the same. Therefore, I continued to bear all his expenses,' the woman said.

She told police he not only raped her, but also exploited her financially.

Police filed a rape case against the accused on Saturday.

The woman alleged that since she had been promised marriage, she continued to maintain a physical relationship.

'He told me that there was nothing wrong in establishing physical relationship with a person whom she would be marrying soon. And I trusted him,' she said in the FIR.

'He continued to give me false hopes by taking me to family functions and made me meet his parents and relatives. Our relationship lasted till I was in India. Later, he blocked all means of communication with me,' she further alleged.

In the meantime, she alleged the man took her to a cousin's wedding where he introduced her to a woman who she claimed turned out to be his girlfriend.

Rohit Yadav, counsel for the woman, said that the accused had taken advantage of her client's innocence and continued to exploit her.

'During her stay in India, my client had been bearing all the expenditure of the accused. He would make her pay the house rent, and buy mobile phones and expensive clothes for him. He would neither return the money my client gave him to get the currency exchanged,' Yadav said.

After she left India, the accused severed all means of communication with her, it was alleged.

She eventually got in touch with his girlfriend in India following which she decided to file a complaint with police.
